Calendar Planning and Avoiding Conflicts

This is a limited list of religious holidays, for more information please see the 2021 Interfaith Calendar.

The holidays listed below are only examples of some religious holidays known to be observed by some members of the Titan community. As no list can adequately capture every holiday observed by our diverse community, this is not intended to represent all religious holidays or all occasions in which a student, staff or faculty member may need an excused absence for religious observance. Please remember there are other holidays that may conflict with University activities and be mindful that a request may be made to observe a holiday not cited below.

NOTE: Jewish and Islamic holidays start in the evening. Participants may not be available for a class starting the evening before the holiday and remain unavailable until the morning after the holiday ends.

The Islamic Faith traditionally requires five prayers throughout the day. Participants may find a quiet space to observe this religious practice. Specific times slightly vary from day to day. Some may also choose to participate in a Friday prayer, known as salaat al-jumu’ah, at noon.
